Registry and Research Identification

Melissa Huang, MPhil

Help us learn more about the natural history of Barth syndrome by joining the Barth syndrome Registry and Repository. When we design clinical trials, it's important for drug developers and regulators to learn about the natural progression of the disease. The way you can help is by providing us information through the registry. We'll do a quick registration walkthrough for those who are new and demonstrate how to do annual updates as an existing registrant. We'll also collect information to generate a ResearchID card for affected individuals, which we recommend using when participating in research studies. Using this Research ID help us further advance Barth science and link valuable data points across different studies.

Story Telling Workshop (Appropriate for mature teens and adults)

See workshop preparation below

Kevin Friert, MBA, Principal and Founder, Salem Oaks

Our lives are full and having, or caring for someone with, a rare disease makes them even more full. When so much is happening, it is a real challenge to distill our stories down to just a few minutes in a way that invites the listener to want to hear more.

At the end of the workshop, participants will be able to:

- Deliver a compelling three-minute version of their story
- Stimulate and answer questions - crisply and understandably
- Use the story to foster longer, ongoing conversations and calls to action
- Prepare for a longer version of their story for presentations and interviews

Take photos and make sure to share!

Nothing says family like photos. Unfortunately, we never have enough photos because we just don't have enough opportunities to capture our moments together. And when we are together, we don't always think about taking photos. Please take lots of photos and upload them to our SmugMug page. We will remind you when you get there.

Story Telling Workshop Preparation

Story telling is something we do more than we realize. Stories are the human testimonials that change the world. People who are often in the position of making decisions about your life want to hear from the people who have Barth syndrome and their caregivers. They want to know the human impact of Barth syndrome in real terms. The stories of the people within the Barth syndrome community are the most powerful tools we have in making a difference for the people we care about.

The challenge with telling our story is we only have a brief window of time to make a big impact. That's where Kevin comes in. Our story telling coach, Kevin Freiert is a master storyteller and hosts two podcasts featuring the stories of people living with rare disease. During the Stronger Together event, we will be working together to refine, improve, and practice telling our stories. So, it's important for us to give some thought to what we want to say when we get there.

To make the most of our time with Kevin, you will need to do a little homework.

- Answer the question, "Why am I telling my Barth Syndrome story?"
- Write out your story in a very short form. Try for no more than 2 pages, double spaced.

If you have any questions about this assignment, contact Kevin Freiert directly.
